Enduring Advocacy Issues for Parents of Gifted Students

A Beyond Giftedness Parent Workshop with Dr. Stephen Schroeder-Davis

In virtually every educational setting in America there are aspects of giftedness that must be understood if gifted students are to thrive, including:

- Precocity and asynchronicity
- Over-excitabilities
- The “selective consumer”
- Difficulty vs. Complexity
- Introversion
- Mindsets and Perfectionism
- Envy

This presentation will focus on each of these issues in turn and will provide parents with strategies to use as they support gifted children.

Dr. Stephen Schroeder-Davis

With more than 40 years in gifted education, Stephen Schroeder-Davis's work has won the John C. Gowan Doctoral Research Award from the National Association for Gifted Children. He has contributed to publications such as Understanding Our Gifted, Parenting for High Potential, Education Week, Book Links and Gifted Education Press, among others. Dr. Schroeder-Davis has served on the board of various GT organizations, and is both a state and regional winner of the Whitney and Elizabeth MacMillan (WEM) award for promoting academic excellence, awarded by the Center for Academic Excellence. He has received the “Friend of the Gifted” award from the MCGT and MEGT and Ohio's Parent Council for his work in gifted education. Dr. Schroeder-Davis' many roles include differentiation coach, curriculum specialist, university professor, author, keynote speaker, and, perhaps most importantly, teacher. Currently a columnist for Understanding our Gifted, Dr. Schroeder-Davis works as a Gifted Curriculum Specialist and teaches an online GT certificate program for educators.
